It enjoys strong transport links with London approximately 120 miles to the southeast and Manchester around 80 miles to the north.

The town has a resident population of just over 200,000 and sits within the wider West Midlands conurbation, home to nearly 5.3 million people. Solihull is served by two passenger railway stations that provide regular direct services to London, Birmingham International to London Euston (72 minutes) and Solihull Station to London Marylebone (85 minutes).

HS2 Solihull Interchange Station

Solihull will be home to the new HS2 Interchange Station. Close to the National Exhibition Centre (NEC) and Birmingham Airport - it will be a major gateway station for the West Midlands region, connecting passengers to Birmingham, Leeds, Liverpool, and Manchester city centres.

HS2 will begin running between 2029 and 2033 when the section between London and the West Midlands is complete and services will expand as new sections of the network are built.
