MARKET OVERVIEW

Hollywood, Florida, has a population of about 193,311 with an average household income around $79,281. Around 19 percent of residents are under 18, and about 27 percent of households include children, creating consistent demand for childcare.

The city offers more than 60 parks, a ±2.5-mile beachfront boardwalk, and is adjacent to Fort Lauderdale–Hollywood International Airport. Its location between Fort Lauderdale and Miami provides access to two major employment markets, making it convenient for commuting families.

Several new developments are adding to the area’s growth, including One Hollywood Residences with 248 units, The Bread Building with 362 units and retail, Soleste Hollywood with 324 units and commercial space, and University Station with workforce and affordable housing near Barry University.

Additional projects such as Sienna, Icon Beach Residences, and new condo and townhome communities are drawing more families. With Brightline rail service nearby in Fort Lauderdale enhancing regional connectivity, these trends support a growing base of working parents in need of daycare services.
