WALKABILITY

Kansas City's renewed focus on walkability and transit-oriented development (TOD) is revitalizing urban living, with projects like the Main Street streetcar extension making car-free lifestyles more viable. With key stops like the Crossroads and Kauffman Center within walking distance, this location is ideally positioned to benefit from this growing trend toward sustainable, connected communities.

The Greenline is a proposed new 10-mile loop that will circle downtown, inspired by the High Line in New York, and the Beltline in Atlanta. Designed to connect neighborhoods, add walkability and spur development. People can park and ride the streetcar or park and walk the Greenline.

After decades of expansion and development, the completion of the KC Streetcar extension in 2025 will enhance demand and attract residents seeking a lifestyle free from automotive dependence.
