A TRANS- FORMATIONAL HISTORY

A TIMELESS TOUCHSTONE OF DOWNTOWN CLEVELAND TAKES
CENTER STAGE IN ITS BRIGHT FUTURE

It started as an idea. One Clevelander's vision that the city could carry the mail directly to its people—which grew and grew until it became the nationwide postal delivery service still used today.

Over 160 years later, a symbol of the city's significance in postal history is meeting the modern workplace moment, bringing today and tomorrow's talent what they've ordered, and closer to home.

The U.S. Postal Service moves its main Cleveland office to this new building in the Tower City Center development. A trailblazing city in the history of USPS, Cleveland innovated and implemented the first free home delivery service for mail in the 1860s that's still employed today.

1934

K&D purchases the building, now a multi-tenant office powerhouse called Post Office Plaza.

2017

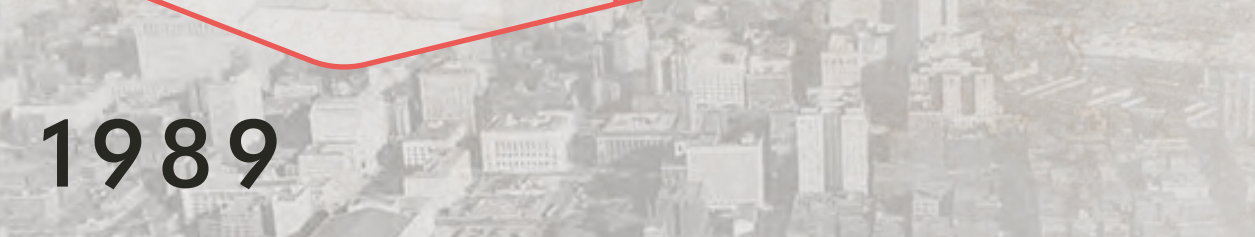

Post Office Plaza is still home to trailblazers, just as it was when it was originally the home of the U.S. Postal Service. Cutting edge firms like BrandMuscle, OpinionRoute, Walter Haverfield, and many more now call Post Office Plaza home and laud the building's role in helping them attract the best talent.

2024

1989

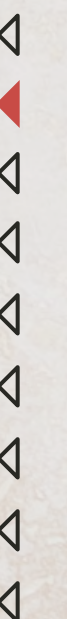

The building undergoes a major adaptive reuse renovation to convert it to a corporate headquarters for engineering firm MK Ferguson and is renamed MK Ferguson Plaza.

2023

K&D procures the two eagle statues that had previously adorned the old Cleveland Chamber of Commerce Building after decades of them sitting on a farm. The statues are installed outside Post Office Plaza, preserving more Cleveland history.
