Ocean Beach - The Place to Be

The pier at golden hour

The Ocean Beach Pier is one of the longest piers on the West Coast — a beloved 1,971-foot landmark stretching boldly into the Pacific. Though no longer open to visitors, its iconic silhouette continues to define the Ocean Beach skyline, a timeless symbol of the community's deep connection to the sea. A true piece of San Diego history, it remains a breathtaking sight from the shoreline below.

Sunset Cliffs — nature's own amphitheater

Just minutes from your door, Sunset Cliffs Natural Park is the kind of place that makes people cancel their flight home. Ancient sandstone bluffs drop straight into the Pacific, hiding sea caves and tide pools alive with color at low tide. Gray whales pass close enough to watch from the trail in winter. Raw, wild California — completely free, completely unforgettable.

Newport Avenue — the last great independent main street

In an age of identical shopping strips, Newport Avenue is genuinely one of a kind. By community vote, chain stores are banned. What you find instead: a 40-year-old antique mall, a boutique selling antique French furniture imported from Paris, a family-run ceramic studio, a winery pouring award-winning local wines, surf shops, galleries, and taco stands that have fed the neighborhood for decades. Every block is a different story.

Dog Beach — the original

Ocean Beach is home to one of California's oldest and most beloved off-leash beaches. Dogs run free in the surf, chase waves, and do exactly as they please — as they have since the 1970s, the result of the same community activism that has kept OB unapologetically itself. This is the neighborhood that solved the problem of leaving your dog behind permanently.

A mural at every corner

OB's street art scene grew organically, wall by wall, from the neighborhood's deep roots in counterculture — not from any city program. Every alley, every side street, every blank wall is a canvas. Walking Newport Avenue and Voltaire Street is an open-air gallery experience that no ticket can buy.

Wednesday nights on Newport

Every Wednesday evening, Newport Avenue transforms — vendors, live music drifting between the stalls, locals catching up, children running between flower sellers and food stands. The Ocean Beach Farmers Market has been running for over 25 years without a single corporate sponsor. It is the living room of the neighborhood, and you live right around the corner.
